Oxygen Education to Present at Technical Education Association National Conference in Indianapolis

Company to share technical education and workforce development expertise at meeting of postsecondary technical educators.

Indianapolis, Ind. – April 5, 2010 – Oxygen Education, LLC, a market leading developer of online learning content for technical education and workforce development, will join more than 400 technical educators who are gathering in Indianapolis April 7 and 8, 2010 for the American Technical Education Association's (ATEA) 47th National Conference on Technical Education, “Technical Education...Putting Americans Back to Work.”

Technical educators prepare learners for careers, providing the contextual learning that develops a qualified workforce for business and industry. Conference attendees will discuss the latest trends and developments in training technology and share best practices. As a conference presenter, Oxygen Education will share its job training and workforce development expertise in a presentation titled, “Customized Online Education: Lean & Green.” The presentation will:

- Discuss how green technologies and lean techniques are impacting jobs.
- Demonstrate Oxygen Education’s green technology and lean techniques online learning content.
- Showcase the company’s award-winning online curriculum for advanced manufacturing.

Educational institutions, workforce development initiatives, and industry implement Oxygen Education online content to offer complete job training programs online and to supplement traditional face-to-face instruction with competency-based online learning that engages learners and ensures they grasp critical subject matter. The Oxygen Education conference presentation is Thursday, April 8 at 10:00 a.m., Discovery A.

The ATEA conference is hosted by Ivy Tech Community College and will be held at the Hyatt Regency Indianapolis. In addition to presenting at the conference, Oxygen Education will provide one-on-one product demonstrations in the conference exhibition booth #17.
